

La Paulée de New York

THE WORLD OF FINE WINE

La Paulée de New York 2011: Choose your weapon

By ALICE FEIRING
Issue 33, 2011

Like a glacier melting under climate change, old wine is endangered in France... One of the evening's most sentimental stories came from one of the Bohr's clients, who last year at auction purchased a Domaine Faiveley 1928 Volnay Clos de Chêne. The collector said, "Erwan Faiveley, managing director at the family's domaine, was studying at Columbia. When I saw the Clos de Chêne, I knew I had to buy it to drink it with him."

At the evening close, the collector sent the bottle over Erwan, who in turn shared it with Frédéric Lafarge. Erwan said, "my great-great-grandfather made this wine. I know I will never have this again. It doesn't exist anymore."

The full article is available here.