“Two weeks ago, I had the pleasure of attending La Paulée de New York. Daniel Johnes, who oversees wine operations for Daniel Boulud’s restaurant empire, started the event 10 years ago as a celebration of Burgundy, and it has quickly become what I think is the greatest bacchanal on the planet. I think that Burgundy inspires passion like no other wine region in the world, and the Paulée de New York truly feels like a gathering of the tribe. It is Woodstock for Winos. All in all, it was a terrific night, with a wonderful conviviality. A good Burgundy, I am convinced, can bridge any divide; a room overflowing with hundreds of good Burgundies can cure humanity of all that ails it.”
